GEN Pervez Musharraf was returning from a strategic meeting in Colombo when Nawaz Sharif overplayed his hand. He interdicted the army chief’s flight, and set off a chain of events the former prime minister would be rueing now in faraway London. Last week, Prime Minister Imran Khan was in Sri Lanka in as close an embrace with its leaders as the coronavirus permitted. There was a time when Sri..... more >>

HAVING failed to prevent a disastrously high number of Covid-related deaths, the British government is at last able to boast about something: its vaccine programme is powering ahead. By giving almost unlimited funds to a group of entrepreneurs with long experience of both venture capital and the health sector, the UK has managed to get access to more vaccines than virtually any other country. I have a business proposition. Pakistan should become a face-mask exporting country. If we are not there already, we should get there pretty soon. Early on in the pandemic, the local manufacturers produced masks for the people of the country, but because no one seems to be interested in wearing them, let us convert this into an export business. There is a global demand and we have a supply to meet ..... more >>

Despite an average of 1100 cases being reported on a single basis and warnings by health experts, Covid-19 related restrictions are being eased in the pursuit of returning back to the pre-pandemic routine. The chances of a third wave manifesting as a repercussion are high, especially considering that our vaccination campaign is nowhere near extensive enough as of yet. If the aim is to facilit..... THE last few months have seen several countries rolling out vaccination drives against the novel coronavirus, which is a matter of immense relief, but the pandemic still has many twists and turns in store. Several highly transmissible strains — of the thousands now known to exist — originally detected in the UK, Brazil and South Africa have spread far and wide. Pakistan happens to be ..... A third wave?
Source: Editorial, The Express Tribune, Islamabad, 2021-03-03
In what signals the possible emergence of a third wave of Covid-19 globally, the number of new cases of the infection across the world rose last week for the first time in seven weeks. The World Health Organization attributes this rise to relaxation in public health measures; continued circulation of variants; and people letting down their guard. At a recent news briefing in Geneva, WHO director g..... more >>

In the global vaccine drive against Covid-19, which began around the world in late 2020, developing countries came to find themselves at a considerable disadvantage in the procurement and distribution of dosages to their populations. This was attributable to several factors, including: the resource constraints in outbidding major economies’ health-budget endowments, the over-accumulation of ..... |
